Child Support Helpful Hints

These are intended as helpful hints only. Contact a divorce attorney or your office for legal advice.

How to Collect Child Support if You are Not Married

If you are not married to the father of your child and you want to collect support you first need to establish paternity. You must file a "paternity action" in family court to do this (Either party can file a "paternity action"). A court order can be used to establish paternity. If paternity is established the father will be required to pay child support and probably will get visitation and maybe custody.

Message Boards

Whoever brings the paternity action usually has to pay for the test if person is not cooperating.

If the mother receives ADC (aid to dependent children) then the state office will proceed with establishing paternity on behalf of the state. The goal is to seek reimbursement for the welfare grants they are paying. If the mother names the father of the child(ren) the state will seek out to establish paternity with a DNA test, and then begin child support proceedings.

The mother must cooperate in the state process by naming the father (ren) or she could lose her ADC grant. However, if she can show "good cause" why paternity should not be established (for instance, domestic violence) the welfare official is supposed to stop paternity proceedings with no loss of ADC. Some welfare workers don't like to stop the proceeding unless you have records showing violence or a restraining order in place. Since many domestic violence cases don't report the abuse you may have to advocate for a "good cause" exemption.

If Your Ex Keeps You Away From Your Children

You still have to pay child support even if your ex is making visitation impossible. Remember, two wrongs don't make a right and you are hurting your children by withholding money.

Go back to Family Court and have your visitation rights enforced!

Stepfathers/Mothers:

Steps are usually not required to pay support of the children of the ex unless they legally have adopted the child(ren).

Bankruptcy:

Back child support cannot be canceled by bankruptcy. Like taxes, or - you owe it until it's paid.

If Your Ex Refuses to Pay Court Ordered Child

1. Contact your state child support enforcement agency (Links are on
2. Under the Child Support Enforcement Act of 1984 the state's attorney's office must help you collect support owed by your ex. Call your attorney's office by looking in the blue pages in the front of your phone book. They will be able to give you your options after hearing your circumstances.
3. There are federal and state locators services which will try to collect child support on your behalf or, in the case of a missing parent, locate them. These services usually charge you a fee after they have collected the

The Revised Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (RURESA):

If you and your ex live in different states and your ex is not paying child support this law is supposed to kick in.

The court in your state contacts a court in the ex's state which will require the ex to pay. This is free of charge.

Self advocacy is the key here. It is very easy to get put on the "back burner" when you are dealing with two different states. Make sure you stay on top of proceedings with follow-up calls, etc.

Child Support Recovery Act of 1992 (CSR)

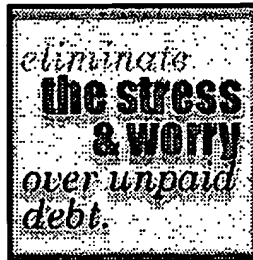

This act makes it a federal crime for a parent to willfully refuse to make child support payments to a parent in another state. Unfortunately, we hear this law is rarely enforced.
